

Firebellies

"Do not fall into the trap of thinking of these short-lived races lesser; the very flames you belch are there but a moment but leave scorch marks." – Governess Gaia

Species Traits

Ability Scores: +2 to Friendship, +1 to Knowledge

Size: Large

Speed: 6 squares (Land), 5 squares (Flight)

Vision: Infrared

Skill Bonuses: +

Philosophical Lizard: Firebellies have no natural end to their life, instead simply growing larger with each decade; as such, they have trouble communicating with more short-sighted races. They automatically fail any Diplomacy, Intimidate or Bluff skill check when a 1 is rolled on the dice, regardless of bonuses.

Eternal Candle: Firebellies do not die due to age, and can overcome almost any naturally occurring illness with time. It's not uncommon for these lizards to sleep for a decade rather than seek medical attention. Firebellies receive a bonus to all (Save End) rolls equal to half their level (Round up).

Emerald Blaze: Firebellies derive their common racial moniker from their ability to belch emerald flames without effort. When you critical strike, the enemy suffers ongoing damage (save ends) fire damage equal to half your level (Round up).

Galactic Council's Database Information File

Lifespan: Immortal. Young Firebellies take to the stars with glee, searching for treasure and knowledge, as they are a very thoughtful species. As they age and grow too large for ships, they prefer residing on space stations and planets.

Physiology: Firebellies have much in common with reptiles from Equestria. Though they are cold-blooded, they are able to produce combustion from a special sac in their belly filled with combustive gases that react to oxygen.

Religion: Firebellies follow a form of ancestor worship that also deifies the eldest of their race. While still-living Firebellies are considered not to be gods, once they pass away it is not uncommon for them to join the Endless Council, a group of ancestors that can be called upon.

Governance: Firebellies follow the Galactic Council, and an age-specific pecking order. They highly respect the rules passed by the collective government that rules the Primary Sector, but will fall to traditions if older firebellies insist.

"Placeholder

The Firebellies are considered the founders of the Galactic Council, bringing much of their laws for other races to follow during the foundation more than 5000 years ago. However, they are not a very collective people. Growing to the size of mountains makes it difficult for them to congregate. As such, they rely heavily on thoughtful writings in place of speeches.

Firebellies are quite numerous in how many exist. Their slow, introspective lifestyles leads to few recorded wars in the Galactic Council records where they participated actively. Still, they are more than willing to share developed technology and religious ideas across the galaxy without expectation of equal repayment.

Play a Firebelly if you want...

- To potentially live a life eternal.
- To show philosophy trumps muscular might.
- To bring insight to an action-oriented group.
- To spread equal respect for all across the stars.

Placeholder

“Placeholder