Character Description

Gravel Hoof earned his nickname when he was a young colt, since he was already quite bigger than the other fillies and colts of his tribe. He was used to ram others when playing or when he was mad because sometimes they would made fun of his right foreleg, since the coat is grey instead of ochre like the rest of his body. Still, while growing up he discovered that he was good at finding trails and tracking others, quickly becoming a pathfinder for his tribe.

Nowadays, Avalanche sometimes get hired by those who wants to travel through the wild lands and needs a guide or someone who could help them to reach certain places. He usually don't trust people on first sight, but if you are able to know him better, he will become more friendly. He is a simple person who is usually honest to those who trust but doesn't really like some aspects of the civilized equestrians, even if he likes to stay in small villages or hamlets, since they are more simple. While his understanding of magic is very limited, he is less superstitious than many others of his tribe, but still he tries to avoid magic users, unless they somehow manage to demonstrate that they are also capable warriors.

Combat:

Thanks to the Bulky Trait, he has a huge advantage while performing HtH Manoeuvres, so he usually tries to start combat performing a Charge against his opponents, trying to knock them down or to push them away.

He will also use his hooves for combat, performing Stomps against tough creatures or to quickly dispatch his opponents or he will try to help the other members of his group, especially those who are able to use weapons (like Boran or Elania) by attacking first the enemy, so they could take advantage of the Parry/Dodge penalty.
